Pastor's Thoughts

It is a new year, and I am beginning to see how much my life is changing. Both of our girls have moved out, and we are cleaning up their rooms and figuring out how to change things around. We will be okay, but it is so new and different.

We start each year thinking of great new things we plan to do. We make a list of these things, but we rarely finish everything on the list. We work on the list and accomplish some of what we intend to do. Maybe we shouldn't make a huge list of things for the whole year, but rather do one thing each month.

Our faith journey is like this, too. We need to work on our faith all the time, but it's best to start with one thing. Maybe the first thing we should think about is making sure we come to church each Sunday. Yes, we need to invite others to join us, but our commitment to coming to worship helps others to see the importance of worshiping together. Make your own commitment, then invite other people to come to church with you. Next, work on reading the Bible every day. Getting started on these two things can change this New Year into something wonderful in each of our faith journeys. Let's get started today!
